Stolen Generations is the name given to at least 100,000 Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children who were removed from their families and placed in institutions or foster care. This practice occurred in the ACT (1999), Tasmania (2000) and Western Australia (2006). The separation of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children from their families was a policy of assimilation. In Queensland and Western Australia, the Chief Protector was able to remove children from their families in the name of assimilation. In New South Wales, after 1940, the removal of Indigenous children was experienced by the overwhelming majority of Indigenous children. The total number of children removed from their families in the name of assimilation is estimated to be around 100,000. The following discussion draws directly on the National Inquiry into the Separation of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Children from Their Families and the Australian Humanities Review: Aboriginal Children by Philip Morrissey.
